I think the total cost of the "management" of the program should be compared to the claims settled, as a measure of the efficiency and effectiveness of taxpayers dollars being spent. I think what will be shown is that we have spent significantly more than we needed reviewing and negating claims, that had they been paid would have cost the taxpayer significantly less than 10 years of effort to assess damages using vaguely remembered technology that none of the current people assessing the dose reconstructions had anything to do with.
