It looks like a good plan, but for utilization outside of medical personnel and academics, language regarding recommendations should be simplified. Public Safety has a large number of respiratory type of exposures. There are thousands of small departments across the US, who would benefit from these recommendations, but if they do not have a Hazardous Materials Team, may not have the training resources. I would imagine that a large number of Departments have never heard of NIOSH. Retired nurses like myself with 19 years working with Public Safety, may be of some assistance in this arena implementing this plan.
