

Ticks and work at the CDC's insectary in Fort Collins, CO

- 0:00-0:30 – Nymphal ticks at various stages of feeding (different levels of engorgement)
- 0:30-0:50 – Life stages of ticks
- 0:51-0:59 – Laboratorian examining ticks in a vial at the CDC's insectary in Fort Collins, CO.
- 0:59-1:48 – Lone star tick climbing up a sock and boot
- 1:49-2:45 – CDC Laboratorian removing a vacuum-sealed jar from the humidifier, placing it on the lab bench, removing an adult blacklegged tick from a small container with forceps, and placing it in a pan.
- 2:46-3:05 – Laboratorian removing a nymphal blacklegged tick from a vial and placing it in a pan on the lab bench in the CDC's insectary in Fort Collins, CO.
- 3:06-3:22 -- Laboratorian removing a larval blacklegged tick from a vial and placing it in a pan on the lab bench in the CDC's insectary in Fort Collins, CO.